

Declaration of a possible conflict of interest
For authors of medical-scientific manuscripts

Dear authors,

the OUP publishes a declaration of a possible conflict of interest with all texts in the medical-scientific section. Giving a statement about possible conflicts of interest provides better transparency for the editorial staff and in particular for the reader. A possible conflict of interest alone does not, of course, invalidate the scientific argument of a manuscript.

Please read the explanation about the conflicts of interest carefully and send this explanation by email, surface mail or fax to:

Explanation

A possible conflict of interest according to the Uniform Requirements for Manuscripts Submitted to Biomedical Journals of the ICMJE (International Committee of Medical Journal Editors) always exists if an author has a financial or personal relationship to a third party, whose interests can be positively or negatively affected by the manuscript. With regard to material interests, these could include financial links to companies whose products are directly or indirectly affected in the article. One such company could, for example, be a pharmaceutical company, which manufactures or sells a drug named in the manuscript (or a drug, which is not referred to by name, belonging to a group of drugs named in the manuscript), or even the product of a competitor. Financial links are deemed to be, for example: employment relationships, consultant activities, shareholding, fees for lectures, the covering of travel expenses, support with studies or other third-party funding.

Non-material conflicts of interest exist, for example if personal, academic, political or religious opinions lead to bias. They can also be in connection to a third party whose economic or ideal interests are affected by the article (partnership, family relations etc.).

This declaration refers to the present and the past five years. With regard to the question of whether a conflict of interest exists, it is not decisive whether an author believes that his/her judgement was also actually impaired by the financial or non-material relationship. In all cases of doubt authors should decide to declare all conflicts of interest.

We require a signed declaration from every author of a manuscript.
